

100+ Android apps that MUST be DELETED – they could be spying on you

All of these apps are found out to be from the same developer which could turn easily your beauty camera app into a spy camera.

A recent study and investigation by CyberNews was able to find a link between a secret network of 27 app developers who have created around 103 apps that has around 69 million installations. Most of these apps shares the same behavior and even the same codes.

The strategy of this secret network of developers involves copying other apps and modifying their visual appearance such as interface, logo, and overall design to make the app look unique and to hide their dirty work, they launch the apps under various developer's names.

CyberNews estimates that the revenue for the apps created by this network could be nearly $1 million per month.

Dangerous Android apps

You might say, I see nothing wrong about a network of developers working together to make bunch of apps right? Not so fast.

The investigation of CyberNews shows that these apps are asking extensive variety of unnecessary device permissions, which is not involved nor used in the core functionalities of the apps. Some of which permissions are modifying or deleting USB storage, turning your mobile's microphone on and off, accessing your device's camera and pictures and even modifying system settings.

At first, to a simple android user, these permissions might not be suspicious backed up by the number of installations of the apps and “credibility” since it’s under the official app store. However, in time the developers could abuse these permissions and turn your favorite app locker app, beauty app, camera or even a simple relax sound sleep music player into a bogus data-collecting app.
